MILITARY MAP OF THE UNITED STATES

Strategic Middle Route ★ Representatives ★

When Abraham Lincoln sought a route for a transcontinental railroad to unite the East with the West, he chose the path first marked by buffalo herds . . . the above Overland trail followed by the Forty-niners . . . the direct, middle route across western America. While the Union Pacific was being constructed westward from Iowa, the building of the Central Pacific was proceeding eastward from California. On May 10, 1869, the two railroads met at Promontory Point, Utah, and were joined together with the driving of the famous Golden Spike. Today, Union Pacific is known as the Strategic Middle Route.

The thirteen western states, served by the railroad, produce a large proportion of the nation's foodstuffs. This same territory also has a great number of important western cities and scenic vacation regions. In fact, Union Pacific serves more National Parks and vacation areas than any other railroad. Therefore, in time of peace, Union Pacific is busily engaged in the shipment of farm produce, livestock and minerals; in the transportation of business travelers and vacationists.

Since the United States has become the "arsenal of democracy," a different situation exists. Vast quantities of war materials must be transported. Day and night, hundreds of freight cars loaded with these vital materials rumble over the rails.

The shipment of produce and livestock must continue as before, so that everyone . . . our armed forces and workers, in particular . . . will have an ample supply of nourishing food.

Business and vacation travel have not been encouraged, as our passenger trains now have a most important and much greater task to perform. Hundreds of thousands of men and women in Uncle Sam's service must be transported.

Thus, to summarize the situation, Union Pacific and all railroads have a tremendous responsibility in providing efficient transportation for war materials, foodstuffs, and the armed forces. Union Pacific is today devoting its equipment, facilities and manpower to one purpose—the winning of the war. We're keeping 'em rolling for Victory!
